Music Theory and Composition I

There are many useful methods of assessment of musical compositions. These assessments may be formal or informal, and are used constantly throughout each day of class. Assessments of students may include, but are not limited to:

Daily Worksheets
Written Quizzes
Major Tests
Major Musical Compositions
Class Discussions and Debates of Music
Class Presentations
Homework
Discussions and Presentations of Musical Scores
Oral Assessments and Questioning
Short-Answer Assignments
Individual and Group Assessments
Written Assignments
Written Evaluations of Compositions
Class Participation
Class Attendance

It should be noted that in Music Theory, the style in which a student prefers to compose or present music will not be evaluated; instead, the form and technique with which he or she composes will be evaluated.
